Imagine you visited a zoo one day and found that you could understand what the animals were saying and you could talk to them. What would the animals say to you?

Last month I went on a school trip to a zoo with my classmates and teachers. We were really amazed to see big and wild animals. We had a lot of fun. there we saw a tiger, giraffe, elephants, lions, hippo and deer etc. All the animals were in cages which, though big, were not big enough for a wild animal and air of gloom surrounded the environment. I could sense that the animals were unhappy as they were being held captive. At once, I realised that I could hear what animals were saying and I was able to understand their language. At first I felt a little strong and could not understand what was happening to me. My classmates were having fun and could not hear any such voices. The animals had various problems. The lion did not like the cage, he wanted to be free and roam in the jungle, hunting for his prey on his own. The hippo was finding the water in the pond not only dirty but also too shallow, he wanted to swim in the water of the river in the jungles. The giraffe did not find the food palatable, the zookeeper's served dry leaves in a big bowl perpetually. He was reminded of the jungle where he used to eat green leaves directly from the trees. I was really sad hearing all their problems. We as human beings are free to do whatever we want but we force our will on animals. Why can't we leave animals in their natural habitat?
