10. Case Study:

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow:

Human civilizations have always thrived on cooperation. In early history, families banded together to form tribes, which gradually evolved into villages and complex urban societies. This cooperative spirit allowed humans to divide labour efficiently—some farmed, others made tools, and some managed administration. Today, this interdependence extends across borders. Similarly, our natural world relies on grand networks; the massive landmass of South America connects dynamically with the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, creating rich coastal biomes. Whether it is a small family unit or a grand continent interacting with an ocean, teamwork and interconnected systems remain vital for survival.

1. Identify the earliest form of grouping that families created according to the text. 1
2. Name the two oceans mentioned in the passage that border South America. 1
3. Explain what is needed for survival? 2
