Long ago, during the Stone Age, people lived very differently from us. They did not have houses, cars, or electricity. Many Stone Age people lived in caves to stay safe from wild animals and bad weather.

A young boy named Taro lived with his family near a forest. Every morning, Taro helped his father collect fruits, nuts, and roots from the forest. His mother used sharp stone tools to cut food and prepare meals.

The people of the Stone Age made tools from stone, wood, and bones. They used these tools for hunting animals and making clothes. They wore clothes made from animal skins to keep warm during cold days.

At night, Taro's family sat around a fire. The fire gave them light, warmth, and protection from dangerous animals. They often shared stories about their hunting adventures.
